Our market is higher than any other because we have more competition—more buyers. buyer must have good limits or he cannot do any business here. The local mill demand amounts to 100,000 bales every year, and the representatives of the BIG exporting houses prefer a market where cotton is offered in large lots: saves time, and time is money. Our geographical position, too, gives us cheap freights to New England and to Europe. Look at the railroad map, and you will see there are five ports competing all the time for Augusta busi ness.
